Net Neutrality vs. the right to discriminate

Brussels, November 28, 2013, 15:00 – 20:00
Hotel Silken Berlaymont, 11-19, Boulevard Charlemagne, 1000 Brussels

Since 2009, the European policy on Net Neutrality was characterized by a reliance on market forces. Provided that markets were competitive, that possible restrictions to the use of applications and contents was transparent and that switching costs for consumers were kept low, the European Commission saw no reason to ban usage restrictions in telecom operators terms and conditions.

In June 2013, Ms Kroes announced a U-turn in the Commission approach by advocating the need for “a safeguard for every European, on every device, on every network”, and “a guarantee of access to the full and open internet, without any blocking or throttling of competing services”. The Commissioner plea was translated into a legislative proposal under the Draft Regulation for a Telecoms Single Market.

The seminar will examine the following issues:

- Lessons from industrial economics and competition law on discrimination
- The impact on the market of the Dutch law on Net Neutrality
- The importance of Net Neutrality for OTTs and broadcasters
- The work of BEREC on Quality of Service
- The French National Digital Council holistic approach on Net Neutrality
- The TSM provision on Net Neutrality
